222 Years on the Discovery of the Rosetta Stone

The famous Rosetta stone was discovered in July 1799 in the the fort of Sultan Qaitbay (Fort of Julien) (1496-1468 A.D) in the city of Rashid (Rosetta) in Nile Delta, 222 years ago.
While repairing its defenses, Lieutenant Pierre-François Bouchard, an officer of the French expedition (1801-1798) uncovered the famous Rosetta Stone at the fort, apparently it was brought in to the site from elsewhere, to be used as a filling stone during the Mamluk period. It was the first Ancient Egyptian bilingual text recovered in modern time.
The Rosetta Stone is a fragment of a larger granodiorite stela, it is 114 cm high it is inscribed in three scripts of a decree issued in Memphis, Egypt during the Ptolemaic period on behalf of King Ptolemy V (204-181 B.C) The stela was erected after the coronation of King Ptolemy V and was inscribed with a decree that established the divine cult of the new ruler. The decree was issued by a congress of priests who gathered at Memphis, the decree records that Ptolemy V gave gifts to the temples. In return the priesthood pledged that the king's birthday and coronation days would be celebrated annually and that all the priests of Egypt would serve him alongside the other gods. The decree concludes with the instruction that a copy was to be placed in every temple, inscribed in ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs (14 lines), and Demotic (32 lines) scripts, and translated to the Greek language (53 lines). It is believed to have originally been displayed at one of the temples close to the city of Rashid possibly at nearby temple of Sais, in the city now known as Sa Al-Hajar. It was probably moved during the Mameluk period, and was eventually used as building material in the construction of the fort of Sultan Qaitbay near the town of Rashid (Rosetta) in the Nile Delta.
The stone was transferred from Rashid to Cairo in July 1799 and when the French left Egypt, the British stipulated that they hand over their archaeological discoveries in Egypt to them, including the Rosetta Stone.
The Rosetta stone was transferred to England in February 1802, where it was displayed in the British Museum in London. After attempts by several scholars to decipher the incantations of the ancient Egyptian language, Jean-François Champollion succeeded in deciphering the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphs on September 1822.
The name of the stone is still closely linked to the city of Rashid (Rosetta), the deciphering of the ancient Egyptian language engraved on the stone marked the beginning of Egyptology.
