In coincidence with Valentine’s Day, celebrated on February 14 each year, the scientific website “Live Science” republished a report of NASA under the title “astronauts highlight an ancient heart-shaped oasis in Egypt” and attached a wonderful photo of the Fayoum Oasis.

NASA’s report explained that the oasis has preserved human life for approximately 8000 years and was a starting point for some important engineering works in ancient Egypt. The report presented information about Fayoum and water channels that connect it with the River Nile. The report said that the engineering, water and agricultural projects carried out by the ancient Egyptians are considered the oldest and largest national projects in the world.
