Monument of the Month

Al-Azhar Mosque in Cairo

Al-Azhar Mosque is one of the most important and famous mosques in Egypt and the Muslim world. It is the first mosque to be built within the walls of Fatimid Cairo. Building a mosque for all Muslims in the center of the city was the general rule followed when building cities and capitals in the Muslim world. Jawhar the Sicilian began the construction of the mosque in 359 AH / 970 AD under the command of Al Moezz le Din Allah, the first Fatimid Caliph in Egypt. The construction was completed in 361 AH/ 972 AD, and it was known as the Mosque of Cairo.

When it was built, Al-Azhar Mosque consisted of a central open court that is covered at its south-eastern, north-eastern, and south-western sides. In year 544 AH/ 1149 AD, the Caliph Al Hafez le Din Allah built a portico surrounding the court from all sides.

The current Al-Azhar Mosque consists of a group of archaeological buildings that were added to the Fatimid mosque in later periods, specifically the Mamluk and the Ottoman periods, in addition to the modern buildings. The Mamluk additions include three Madrasa; the Tiberseya, Aqbaghweya, and Jawhareya. The largest addition of the Ottoman Empire was the Ottoman mosque that was built by Prince Abd Al Rahman Katkhuda in 1167 AH/ 1753 AD. Muhammad Aly's family continued the restoration works and continuously added to the complex, until it reached its current size. The mosque is now a building surrounded by an enclosure wall with eight doors and has five minarets.

Recently, Al-Azhar Mosque underwent its largest and most complete restoration work in its history. On March 6th 2018, the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt, His Royal Highness the Crown Prince of Saudi Arabia, the Minister of Antiquities, and the Grand Imam of Al-Azhar inaugurated the mosque after the restoration works that were underway there for more than three years. The restoration project included the interior and exterior facades, the reliefs, decorations, ceilings, windows, Mashrabeya, and minarets, as well as the replacement of the mosque's floor with the same type of marble used in the Sanctuary of Mekka.
